Through the vision of Floyd’s co-worker Jackson Rhoades, the Mountain Home community came together to establish this trail around scenic Lake Norfolk in memory of the avid outdoorsman. Grantmaking Guidelines

ARCF works to improve the quality of life of Arkansans by making grants for charitable, benevolent, scientific, religious and educational purposes in our state. Any public school, government agency, hospital or 501(c)(3) public charity in Arkansas is eligible to receive grants from ARCF.

Many of our grants are recommended by our donors, who establish endowments to support charitable causes. We also offer several open calls for proposals each year through our central office in Little Rock and local affiliate offices across the state.

Grants are available twice a year through ARCF’s signature Giving Tree Grant Program, which allows us to respond to immediate charitable needs at the local level.

- Spring cycle: begins January 10, proposals due February 15
- Fall cycle: begins July 10, proposals due August 15

Visit arcf.org for grant guidelines, applications and information about upcoming grant opportunities.

A Step in the Right Direction

Dee, the manager of a Texarkana drug store, was her family's primary bread winner until a back injury left her unable to work. Her health deteriorated and her bills piled up as she waited for her application for disability benefits to be processed. With Christmas approaching, Dee's family was in danger of going without electricity, much less presents under the tree.

Thankfully, through an endowment established almost 20 years ago, Dee found the leg-up she needed to start moving forward.

Serving on the board of the Truman Arnold Foundation in the late 1980s, Bobbie Atkinson and her son Tony Arnold were saddened by the number of requests the foundation received from regular people with extraordinary needs. After Tony's death in an automobile accident in 1990, his mother decided to honor his memory by establishing an endowment through Texarkana Area Community Foundation, an ARCF local affiliate office, to provide emergency assistance to people in crisis.

"There are so many people who find themselves in a situation where, once in their lives, they need a helping hand," explained Atkinson. "This endowment is for people who need help yesterday."

Now, through a partnership between local nonprofit Domestic Violence Prevention and ARCF's Texarkana Area local affiliate office, the Robert Anthony "Tony" Arnold Memorial Endowment for Community Emergencies provides the means to make an instant impact in the lives of people with immediate needs.

Working closely with other social service agencies in the area, Domestic Violence Prevention learns about people with emergency needs — not just the abused women served by the organization, but also men, children and the elderly.

The organization assesses the need — a past-due utility bill, an unfilled prescription, unpaid rent — and makes an immediate, one-time grant to the utility company, pharmacy or property manager to cover the need. Then, the Foundation reimburses Domestic Violence Prevention with funds from the Tony Arnold Endowment.

For Dee, the financial support and quick response afforded by this partnership saved her family from spending Christmas without electricity — a small step in the right direction that enabled the family to get back on its feet.

Through the Community Foundation, Bobbie Atkinson translated her desire to help people in crisis into a solution to respond quickly to emerging needs. Now, when our state needs flexible and effective philanthropy the most, ARCF is committed to working with passionate Arkansans to step up to the challenges that face our communities.

Together we can lay a path for effective giving.

Be Active, Be Outside in Memory of David Floyd

Everyone says it is the perfect way to remember David Floyd. His family, his co-workers, the community of Mountain Home and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers have partnered step by step to build David's Trail on Lake Norfolk.

"We've had a big tailwind the whole time," said ringleader Jackson Rhoades of Wells Fargo Advisors in Mountain Home, who worked with David for 11 years. "The public-private-community partnership is unbelievable. Everyone has been willing to help — sometimes they give money, sometimes they manage events and sometimes they come and pick up fallen limbs on the trail."

When completed, David's Trail will stretch 50 miles from the Arkansas state line to Buzzard Roost, winding around the wooded edge of Lake Norfolk near Mountain Home. Last winter an eagle's nest was the big attraction, but on summer days mountain bikers, marathon runners and walkers of all ages share the six miles of trail that are already completed.

David Floyd died on a run with friends down a country road just outside Mountain Home early on the morning of July 15, 2006. He was a true leader — loved, admired and missed by his entire community. Jackson's idea to have David's friends build a trail on Lake Norfolk first was approved by community leaders and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers who manage the property. Then in mid-2008 Jackson called David's wife Cindi.

"Jackson said, 'This is something I want to do. I'm not asking if I can; I'm asking for your blessing.' He already had plans drawn up and the name," Cindi said. "Immediately I knew it was right. David was a runner and loved being outdoors. Because he gave so much to his community, a lot of people wanted to give back. It makes me proud that his memory will live on."

Cindi and her three daughters, Leah, Meredith and Anna come up to the trail quite a bit. "I feel closer to him up here. It's where we mark milestones like his birthday and Father's Day or just come for a walk," she said.

And it's a special place to remember David's commitment to his community and to fitness. "David was the type that took very good care of himself, ate right and exercised," said his mother Roberta Floyd. "He rode motorcycles, four-wheelers and flew airplanes. He was a leader in our family and in the community."

Trail construction began in early January of 2009, and much of the activity thus far has gone into raising funds for the construction. But endowment funding is needed to permanently maintain the trail. Janice Fletcher, executive director of ARCF's Twin Lakes Community Foundation local affiliate office, said it was natural for Jackson to come to the Foundation to set up the Friends of David's Trail Endowment. Jackson's dad, Sam Rhoades, was a founding member of the ARCF local affiliate office, and Jackson has helped clients set up funds through the Foundation.

Alison and Richard Hester are runners from Mountain Home who've become contributors. "It is a great resource for runners and anyone who wants to be outside," Richard said. "We can't have David, but we can have what he believed in — being active and being with friends," added Alison.

"Our society is becoming more sedentary and obese," said Dr. Araneda, a cardiologist at Baxter Regional Medical Center where David led the board. "It is important to have a facility like David's Trail because it increases the likelihood people will do more outdoor activities, rather than staying indoors. Kids do what their parents take them to do, and this trail is a push for health."

David's oldest daughter Leah is thankful to all those who've made David's Trail possible. "We are proud of Dad," she said. "It means a lot that his contributions to the community aren't forgotten. We are blessed and thankful to Jackson for seeing this project through."

Friends and family came together to create David's Trail in memory of community leader David Floyd of Mountain Home.

“The public-private-community partnership is unbelievable. Everyone has been willing to help — sometimes they give money, sometimes they manage events and sometimes they come and pick up fallen limbs on the trail.”

Arkansans Meet ARCF Hunger Charity Challenge

Two days a week, 35 households a day from Nevada County, Blevins and Gurdon come to FoodShare Arkansas in Prescott to choose from fresh bread, frozen meats, canned goods, fresh produce and personal care items in a store run by volunteers.

Two major employers in the area have closed their doors in the past year. "I really didn't know how great the need was until I got a call about working with FoodShare," said Director Faye Purifoy. "We go home every day thinking, 'It will be alright tomorrow.'"

FoodShare Arkansas is one of 100 hunger charities statewide that received funds from the Arkansas Community Foundation Community Giving Stimulus last winter. Through the program, more than 750 Arkansans used arcf.org to make gifts from $25 to $2,000 for a total of $214,956. These funds were matched by $100,000 from Arkansas Community Foundation for a total of $314,956 for hunger relief.

"We are elated," said ARCF President and CEO Heather Larkin. "The ARCF board hoped the people of Arkansas would step up to our challenge, and they did. It is exciting to see what can happen when Arkansans decide to help their neighbors who are hungry."

The Community Giving Stimulus challenge arose from awareness of a growing need. As the economic downturn worsened last fall, ARCF learned that many of the state's major food banks, small soup kitchens and food pantries were experiencing record demand. At the same time, these organizations were receiving fewer donations as donors tightened their belts.

As the holiday season approached, the ARCF Board of Directors took action, authorizing a grant from its Giving Tree Endowment to create a Community Giving Stimulus Fund in mid-November. A cadre of other ARCF donors contributed to the temporary fund, creating a pool of $100,000 to match gifts from the public. Then ARCF designed and marketed a weeklong web-based giving program that matched $1 for every $2 donated through arcf.org to the donor's hunger charity of choice.

By week's end, the hundreds of small donations that flooded in (many just $25), met and then exceeded the match challenge, generating more than $300,000 for hunger relief.

FoodShare Arkansas received a check for more than $600, which supplemented funding from founder Brian Burton of Dallas, food drives and local churches. By purchasing food from the Harvest Texarkana Food Bank for a reduced rate, FoodShare Arkansas is able to provide two-and-a-half times more food than if purchased at commercial groceries. Harvest Texarkana received its own Community Giving Stimulus check for more than $21,600.

"National food companies have really slowed down their donation channels, understandably so with the economy," Michelle Harutunian, Harvest Texarkana executive director, reported to the Texarkana Gazette. "We're finding it more and more challenging to locate the foods our agencies desperately need through the traditional donation channels. We'll use this check to do some bulk purchasing."

Community donors support both pantries that provide food directly to hungry families and area food banks that distribute low cost food to the pantries. Through the Community Giving Stimulus, ARCF raised awareness of the need to feed the hungry through both types of organizations and provided an added incentive for giving through matching funds.

"In hard times, organizations like Arkansas Community Foundation have a decision to make in response to reduced assets," Larkin said. "Our decision was not to close ranks and wait for the market to get better, but to use the power of philanthropy to make a difference today."

A New Generation Gets Serious About Philanthropy

Don't let their jeans and t-shirts fool you; these teens are experienced philanthropists, engaged in the serious business of grantmaking, endowment building and community service.

Gathered at ARCF's Youth Advisory Council conference in March, a diverse group of young leaders challenged conventional wisdom about what philanthropy in Arkansas looks like. Through ARCF's Youth Advisory Council (YAC) program, teens work together to raise money for their own group endowments, review grant proposals and fund charitable projects they choose.

"Youth really take to philanthropy easily. It's a natural inclination to want to help people," said Robert Zunick, one of the Hot Springs Area YAC's adult advisors. YAC nurtures teens' innate desire to help by giving them access to the Foundation's resources and empowering them to make their own charitable decisions.

This year, Hot Springs Area YAC members took the initiative to develop their philanthropic skills even further, petitioning their advisors to host a statewide YAC conference. "It had been several years since the last conference," noted Robert Zunick. "The kids wanted to do it again. They get a lot out of getting together and seeing that other kids are interested in the same things they are."

The students themselves planned much of the conference, scheduling games and ice-breakers to build rapport and breakout sessions to expand their knowledge. "We wanted sessions that answered the questions we asked when we joined YAC and allowed us to share ideas so we can accomplish more next year," explained senior Kirstin Poole. YAC graduates from Hot Springs Area and Columbia County volunteered to facilitate these sessions and share their expertise.

Gladys Ugbade, a Hot Springs YAC graduate, gave a presentation about ethical issues in philanthropy. "YAC is fun," she said, "but there's a lot of serious stuff that goes on." For Gladys and the other returning graduates, serving as mentors for the younger YAC members in attendance was just another way the program has allowed them to grow as leaders and contribute to the future of their communities. "I want these students to have the same experiences I had in YAC. We just want to make sure this keeps going," said Gladys.

As these young people begin careers and families, the charitable legacy they began as teens will follow them. "What we've seen over the past five or six years of doing this is that the kids who take leadership positions in YAC continue to be interested in charitable giving and community service after they leave us," said Zunick.

The skills and insights YAC members gain through hands-on experience with the philanthropic process will help strengthen the communities where they make their future homes. "YAC is really about more than philanthropy," said Heather Larkin, ARCF president and CEO. "It is about engaging teens to create a sense of community and helping them understand how to make a positive difference where they live. When that happens, it's more likely they'll want to stay in their hometown or return after college to raise their kids where they grew up."

Arkansans Are Stepping Up in Tough Times

Arkansas Community Foundation is stronger than ever.

Those who judge an organization by assets alone might dispute my claim, since the economic downturn cut our assets from $130 million in the summer of 2008 to $106 million in June of 2009. But this decline is significantly less than many other organizations and individual investments, and I credit our sound fiscal position to excellent oversight by our board and financial managers.

In truth, it is the steps we take to create meaningful community change, not just a tally of our assets, that define the strength of Arkansas Community Foundation. Despite tough economic times, our family of philanthropists stepped up to make FY2009 a record-breaking year for giving. A total of $8 million in grants were made to Arkansas nonprofits, with more than a million of those dollars awarded through Giving Tree Endowments designed to meet unprecedented or unexpected needs.

Fiscal Year 2009 began with a commitment from Arkansas Community Foundation to engage donors and partners in supporting community leadership, and to build the skills, knowledge and relationships that will enable us to develop effective strategies to transform our communities.

It didn't take us long to translate those ideas into action. When hunger charities reported needs were skyrocketing and giving was not keeping up, the ARCF board decided to take action that would stimulate giving. Through the Giving Stimulus, hundreds of Arkansans partnered with Arkansas Community Foundation to raise more than $300,000 in a single week last December. And in the first six months of 2009, more than 100 hunger relief charities gave away record amounts of food to Arkansas families.

ARCF grants are at work every day, providing free health care in Mississippi County, fostering literacy and history appreciation at summer camp in Ouachita County, helping rebuild a kitchen for Russellville's Main Street Mission, growing a lush green lawn on The Square in Marianna and giving a voice to abused and neglected children in White County. In every one of our 26 local affiliate offices throughout the state and in our central office in Little Rock, I see Arkansans stepping up in tough times to help their neighbors.

Together, we have proven that endowment giving can be a powerful force for good in our communities. Join me in stepping up to new challenges and opportunities that are just around the corner.

Warmest Regards,

Heather Larkin, President and CEO

Are You Ready to Step Up for Arkansas?

Jerry and Madelyn Adams of Conway took advantage of ARCF's flexible giving options by making a gift to ARCF's statewide Giving Tree Endowment and establishing a scholarship fund to enable Arkansas students to attend Jerry's alma mater, The University of the South.

Our state's charitable needs are greater than ever, but you can make a difference. By working with Arkansas Community Foundation, you can leave a philanthropic legacy and ensure financial support for the causes you care about now and in the future. Now is the time to take the first step toward transformational change in your community.

The process is really quite simple. You can choose to establish a named fund and recommend grants from your fund to charities you want to support. Or, you can make a gift to one of our local or statewide Giving Tree Endowments managed by the Foundation.

Whether you choose to play an active role in the grantmaking of your fund or make a gift to a Giving Tree Endowment to allow the Foundation to make grants that respond to emerging community needs, you'll find that the Foundation makes giving simple and flexible. ARCF is able to handle a variety of assets, including gifts of cash, securities and insurance. And the Foundation's experienced staff can provide you with the answers you need to be an effective philanthropist.

ARCF protects donors' investments and charitable intentions forever. Annual independent audits and filing of tax returns, public disclosure of all Foundation activities and careful selection of a diverse statewide board of community leaders ensure public accountability.

Acting as a community catalyst, the Foundation convenes diverse voices and groups to find solutions to local issues and foster greater giving and volunteerism throughout Arkansas. And as a member of our family of philanthropists, you can partner with others who share a passion for the causes you care about in order to increase the impact of your giving.

If you're ready to step up for Arkansas through a permanent philanthropic legacy, ARCF is ready to walk with you. Contact Development Director Melissa Stiles at mstiles@arcf.org or 501-372-1116, or visit arcf.org for more information.

Outstanding Philanthropic Corporations Exemplify Spirit of Giving

A common thread among this year's Outstanding Corporate Philanthropy honorees is their shared commitment to leveraging the talents and individual interests of their employees to provide hands-on service to their communities.

Since 2001, Arkansas Community Foundation has partnered with Arkansas Business to honor companies that exemplify a spirit of good citizenship, concern for community and worthy philanthropic endeavors.

This year's winners, named at the February 2009 Arkansas Business of the Year ceremony, were:

- Arkansas Best Corporation, Large Business Category
- Metropolitan National Bank, Medium Business Category
- JPMS Cox, PLLC, Small Business Category

Through matching programs, "time on the clock" volunteerism and employee input on corporate philanthropy, these organizations have made giving back a part of the job.

Arkansas Best employee Kim Reitz works on construction of an Extreme Makeover Home Edition renovation for Colleen Nick in Alma, Arkansas.

John Steuri and Robert Zunick Receive Lugean Chilcote Award

Established in 1985, the Lugean Chilcote Award recognizes the extraordinary contributions of ARCF board members who have gone above and beyond the ordinary responsibilities of board service. The 2009 Chilcote Award winners are John Steuri of Little Rock and Robert Zunick of Hot Springs.

Steuri served on the board from 2003 to 2009 and continues to participate as an at-large member of the Finance Committee. He was instrumental in leading the Foundation through two major transitions: the adoption of a new investment consultant and the move to the new facility at Union Station.

Zunick has served on the board of ARCF's Hot Springs Area

Community Foundation local affiliate office since its inception in 1991. He is also the adult advisor for the Hot Springs Area Youth Advisory Council (YAC) and recently worked with local YAC members to coordinate a statewide YAC educational conference on philanthropy.

Both Steuri and Zunick have established charitable funds through ARCF.

This award is named for Lugean Chilcote, a past member of the state board, to honor the significant service he gave to the Foundation. Chilcote lives in Little Rock, where he is a practicing architect.

Giving Tree Society

Many hands make light work. That's the premise behind ARCF's Giving Tree Endowments, which allow individuals to come together to pool their resources and invest in the future of their communities or the whole state.

Gifts to the statewide Giving Tree endowment or the local fund in your area enable ARCF to make timely grants to nonprofits when they can make the most dramatic impact. Last year, more than $1 million in Giving Tree grants supported causes as diverse as a beautification project in Marianna, a hunger relief program in Texarkana and a tornado recovery effort in Atkins.

But the Giving Tree program isn't just about combined impact; it's also about the future. Your Giving Tree gift is permanent but flexible, so that it can be directed to the programs or organizations making change and offering the most vital services at the time. Although you can't know what the future will hold, you can take steps now to ensure that resources are available to support needs that emerge 10, 50 or even 100 years from now.

Those who have stepped up to ensure the future of their communities through gifts of $10,000 or more to a local or statewide Giving Tree Endowment become members of The Giving Tree Society.

Financial Information

FY 2009 was a remarkable year for both gift contributions and grantmaking. Even in such a difficult economic climate gifts remained strong — totaling $12.2 million and were comparable to totals for the previous two years. Grants reached a record $9.3 million, almost $2 million higher than totals of the previous two years. ARCF experienced negative investment growth of 20.5 percent, which outperformed the composite index but largely contributed to the decline in total assets from $129 million to $107 million. Investment advisors have positioned investments with a diversified asset allocation to meet current cash requirements while benefiting from market gains that may occur in the second half of 2009 and beyond. As of June 30, 2009, ARCF's investment pool was comprised of 53.3 percent to equities, 17.5 percent to fixed income, 21.9 percent to alternative investments and 7.3 percent to cash equivalents.

Asking the Big Questions

Collaboration on funding a community needs assessment put ARCF's Carroll County Community Foundation local affiliate office in a regional leadership role and helped Northwest Arkansas assess its human needs in an environment of rapid change and growth.

"The Northwest Arkansas Community Indicators Report: A Quality of Life Assessment," asks the big questions about Carroll, Madison, Washington and Benton Counties. Published in late 2008 by the Community and Family Institute of the University of Arkansas, the study examines everything from wellness and educational statistics to income and poverty levels across the region.

"CCCF was invited to sponsor this study by helping defray some of the cost associated with collating and reporting the information," said Carroll County Community Foundation Executive Director Sharon Spurlin. The affiliate office has convened two information-sharing sessions that included elected officials and most of the county's nonprofit, medical and education leaders. These meetings will continue to guide resource allocation decisions and aid the Foundation's grantmaking efforts.

CCCF is committed to stay engaged with University researchers and the other study sponsors to ensure all officials and service organizations in Carroll County are well informed about the best application of their efforts to continually improve life in their communities.

Tools for Building Community

Tiger Serve Day, sponsored by the Ben M. Elrod Center for Family and Community at Ouachita Baptist University in Arkadelphia, gives students an opportunity to help elderly individuals and those with special needs by assisting with painting, yard work, cleaning, building and other small jobs twice each year.

A community tradition since 1997, Tiger Serve Day participation has doubled in the past few years. Flyers are posted in area businesses and team leaders canvas neighborhoods a month before each service day to talk to individuals who have projects for the service teams.

Tools for these projects are provided to the students by the Elrod Center, and every year funds are needed to replace broken tools and provide new ones. ARCF's Clark County Community Foundation local affiliate office awarded a $500 grant this spring to purchase tools and supplies. "This money will help purchase needed tools that will allow the volunteers to work more efficiently and serve a greater number of people," said Elrod Center Assistant Director Judy Duvall.

"Tiger Serve Day is visible evidence of OBU working to better our town and its people," said Ginger Overturf, Clark County Community Foundation community director. "We are proud to partner with them to build community in Arkadelphia."

Making Less More

Building on two years of steady grantmaking growth, the board members of ARCF's relatively young local affiliate in Cleburne County were determined to give away even more in the 2009 fiscal year. "In 2008, we managed to grant $14,000, which was double our total from the previous year," explained Brenda Hill, Cleburne County Community Foundation executive director. "We thought, 'Wouldn't it be amazing if we could double our giving every year!'"

But their plans were threatened by the downturn in the stock market, which caused their available pool of grantmaking funds to decrease. Though they didn't know where the additional money would come from, the board members were resolute in their goal to beat their 2008 giving totals. "The board said, 'Where can we get more? Whom can we ask?' They were the ones that stepped up," said Hill.

Thanks to the individual contributions of board members and other donors, the Cleburne County local affiliate office managed to grant out $15,310 in unrestricted Giving Tree grants, a 9 percent increase over the previous year and a moral victory in tough economic times. "The nonprofits who received funding were not expecting to get half of what we granted," said Hill. "They were just amazed when they realized the total was more this year than last!"

Upward Bound at Southern Arkansas University in Magnolia prepares low income and first generation college-bound students to succeed in academics and college life.

"These are kids who have potential, but their families may not be pushing for them to go to college," said Debbie Guevara, Assistant Director of SAU Upward Bound. "We have to teach the whole family about the importance of higher education."

Each summer around 100 high school students are on campus for five weeks to take academic classes and get a jump-start on college life. One popular activity is the production of a play that family members and friends — as well as local daycare and pre-school students — attend for free. This year ARCF's Columbia County Community Foundation local affiliate office awarded a $500 grant to purchase the rights to the script and rent staging for "Cinderella's Glass Slipper."

Upward Bound strives to provide worthwhile activities that challenge participants to achieve their potential, and the play was a key motivator for many students. "The musical was fabulous, and the kids loved learning to do the waltz," Guevara said. "So many of our kids had never been to a play, much less participated in one."

Women on a Mission

"Graceful Philanthropy" is the motto for the Women's Charitable Endowment of Conway County, a fund established through an innovative challenge: 100 women, 100 dollars each.

"Conway County and Morrilton are known for having some of the most active women's civic organizations in Arkansas," said Susan Dumas, executive director of ARCF's Conway County Community Foundation local affiliate office, where the endowment was established. "Building on that particular strength was a perfect opportunity because we already have a large group of philanthropic-minded women in our community."

The relatively small financial commitment required to join this giving circle allows women of almost all income levels to be a part of an enduring charitable legacy in Conway County. The endowment's diverse group of contributors plans to meet annually to hear proposals and make grants to projects that benefit women and girls.

"Most of these women weren't previously involved in the community foundation," noted Dumas. "Now we've got almost 100 women who are complete and total advocates for the community foundation who might not have even heard of us a year ago."

R.A.I.D. Supports Drug Prevention

The roar of the crowd has grown a little louder and the crack of the bat more frequent at Jonesboro's annual R.A.I.D. (Residents Against Illegal Drugs) Softball Tournament. This year, 44 teams assembled at the Southside Softball Complex for a little friendly competition, generating $10,000 for drug prevention efforts in Craighead County.

The thriving tournament originated in 1998 when a group of friends decided to do something about the drug problem they observed in their community. They banded together to form a softball tournament that would provide a positive extracurricular activity for children, while simultaneously raising funds to support the local D.A.R.E. (Drug Abuse Resistance Education) program.

Soon, they also established a scholarship to assist students in Arkansas State University's Criminology Department who are preparing for careers in law enforcement. This year, ARCF's Craighead County Community Foundation local affiliate office began administering the scholarship.

"We'll be working directly with the chair of the Criminology Department to make sure students take advantage of this opportunity," said Barbara Weinstock, executive director of the Craighead County affiliate office. "Our role is putting people together." Indeed, through this kind of collaboration, local law enforcement, educational institutions, nonprofits and Residents Against Illegal Drugs are working together to make Craighead County a safer place.

Enriching Children's Lives

They say it takes a village to raise a child, and ARCF's Endowment Foundation of Cross County local affiliate office is helping to increase the capacity of its "village." Through 12 grants totaling $7,000, the Foundation supported local efforts to improve children's lives through education, arts exposure, hunger relief and recreation.

"There is just a natural draw to help children, and the responses you get from them are rewarding," explained Georgia Ross, executive director of the Cross County affiliate office. This year's grants included support for reading programs led by the Boys & Girls Club and Union Valley Church, a "Food for Kids" program through Arkansas Rice Depot, summer arts activities at the Cross County Arts Council and a youth gardening initiative through the University of Arkansas Cooperative Extension Service.

Additionally, the Foundation's flourishing Youth Advisory Council in Cross County is instilling teens with an appreciation for the power of giving. "These teens are learning enthusiastically about fund development, effective grantmaking and needs in the county, while developing leadership skills that should serve them and the towns they live in now and far into the future," Ross said.

Board members from ARCF's Delta Area local affiliate office collaborated with other leaders in Dumas to raise funding and support for a new technology center for the town.

For a list of Delta Area funds see page 35.

Rewriting the Economy

In the 1950s, Dumas's local leaders strove to bring industry to their farming town; now they're preparing to rewrite their economy yet again. "We know right now that if we don't adapt to technology, we don't assure the future of the area," said Charlotte Schexnayder, acting director of ARCF's Delta Area Community Foundation local affiliate office.

Rewriting the area's economy means preparing a workforce for new jobs in technology industries. Working with the Arkansas Economic Development Commission and a host of other agencies, Dumas's leaders set the goal of establishing a technology center where students and adults could use and receive training on cutting edge equipment and software.

"In a little town, everybody gets involved in everything," Schexnayder said. And that's certainly the case with Dumas's quest for a technology center. Local elected officials, the chamber of commerce, area banks, business leaders and even the high school's EAST lab students have contributed to the effort by writing grants, proposing programming for the center and building support in the community.

ARCF's Delta Area local affiliate office formed a technology committee to support the effort and has contributed more than $90,000 to the future center through six grants from several endowments. "You just start putting it together and it will add up," said Schexnayder.

Make a Child Smile

Tracy Stocks, owner of Stocks Mortgage of Conway and a mother of teenagers, noticed that some students do not have the ability to purchase new clothing and grooming supplies so important to the back-to-school process. This year about 400 middle school students received clothing, shoes and hygiene products free and in confidence thanks to the organization she founded, Make a Child Smile of Central Arkansas.

"We talk with preachers, school counselors and other trusted sources to determine who needs our services," Stocks explained. "Getting cool clothes is important because if you feel good about how you look, you're going to make better choices and have more confidence in school and in your life."

ARCF's Community Foundation of Faulkner County local affiliate office made a $2,150 grant to Make a Child Smile, and Stocks made an important contact when she met another ARCF/Faulkner County grant recipient, Faye Shepherd of the Faulkner County Court System.

"I love that the Community Foundation played a role in not only funding their projects, but in providing a forum where they learned how their organizations can work together for at-risk kids in our community," said Julie LaRue, community director in Faulkner County.

A Hand Up, Not a Handout

Because of the economic downturn, ARCF's Fort Smith Area Community Foundation local affiliate office determined grantmaking would be centered on basic human needs. To that end, they made $16,800 in grants during the 2008-2009 fiscal year to organizations providing hunger relief, shelter and health care for Fort Smith area citizens.

Organizations like the Arkansas Rice Depot, Community Services Clearinghouse, Donald W. Reynolds Cancer Support House and Good Samaritan Clinic received significant grants from the Foundation to ensure that residents have a hand up, not just a handout.

The Donald W. Reynolds Cancer Support House provides cost-free support for patients actively fighting cancer. "We gave a $2,500 grant this year to help patients with basic needs like past-due utility bills that mount up during a battle with cancer," said Darrel Cunningham, executive director of the Fort Smith Area affiliate office.

Since 2003, Good Samaritan Clinic has treated and provided prescription medication to more than 8,000 homeless people, low-income working people without health insurance and those who are facing extraordinary life circumstances. In that same time period, the Foundation has made six grants totaling $13,250 to the Clinic, with a $4,000 grant awarded this fiscal year.

Support for Emergency Needs

Some Greene County residents were without power for almost a month after a destructive ice storm hit northern Arkansas in January 2009. According to Marci Lincoln, executive director of ARCF's Endowment Foundation of Greene County local affiliate office, the storm put a great deal of strain on local relief agency Mission Outreach.

When the Foundation's local board learned that they had extra funds left over in their spring grant cycle, their first thought was to support Mission Outreach. "We were able to give them an extra grant to help them respond to the requests they were inundated with," reported Lincoln.

In addition to creating an immediate demand for food and shelter, the ice storm called attention to a need for better emergency preparedness in Greene County. The Foundation assisted with this need, as well, by making a grant to the local Red Cross to maintain a storage facility in Greene County for cots, blankets and other emergency supplies for future disasters. "I think there's an awareness on our Grants Committee that Greene County has to be more prepared for emergency situations, and this was a way to respond to that need," said Lincoln.

A Place at the Table

"It takes time to be recognized as a vital force in the community," said Ann Carrithers, executive director of ARCF's Hot Springs Area Community Foundation local affiliate office. But this year, perhaps more than any previous year, Carrithers has observed that the Hot Springs Area affiliate office has reached a tipping point with regard to community awareness.

Thanks to the ongoing outreach work of local board members and donors, Carrithers said the Foundation was invited to participate in a number of community forums this year on topics ranging from mental health initiatives to the expansion of the Arkansas School for Math, Science and the Arts. By earning a seat at the table for important discussions, the Hot Springs Area affiliate office has stepped up its ability to gain insight into community needs and make connections that will lead to positive change.

"This is the culmination of 18 years working in the community," said Carrithers. "As we continue to gain awareness, we're honored to join these conversations so that we can find out what's going on and take action."

Healthy Meals for Hungry Families

A study in the Journal of the American Dietetic Association last year confirmed what families across Arkansas already know: junk foods cost less per calorie than fresh, nutrient-rich produce. While serving nutritious meals on a budget is a challenge for any family, those who rely on assistance from feeding programs have an even tougher time keeping healthy foods on the table.

ARCF's Johnson County Community Foundation local affiliate office took action this year to help hungry families stretch their dollars a little farther. The Foundation made a $600 grant to purchase direly needed protein items for the food bank of the Clarksville Housing Authority (CHA). In partnership with the grant, Johnson County Cooperative Extension Service Officer Susan Pickle taught free nutrition classes in which CHA residents learned how to select healthy foods and prepare meals with the foods they receive from CHA. These lessons are supplemented with easy recipes in CHA's monthly newsletter that help residents make the most of every meal.

To further combat hunger, the Johnson County local affiliate office's board established a "Stop Hunger Endowment" for Johnson County, with the assistance of a matching gift from an anonymous donor. This new endowment will enable the Foundation to continue to support innovative programs to help local residents lead healthier lives.

Laying the Groundwork

The Square in Marianna, designated an Historic Commercial District on the National Register, is the center of town activities – the site of the annual Fall Festival, a favorite venue for weddings and a gathering place for the community.

But this green space had ceased to be green. A sprinkler system and new sod were required to revive The Square, according to Nancy Apple, executive director of ARCF's Community Foundation of Lee County local affiliate office. The Foundation worked with advisory board member Mark Smith to raise money from private donors and Rotary International so that a grant could be made to the City of Marianna for the improvements.

"We raised $15,000 — it was about knowing who to go to," Smith said. "The people in Marianna are really giving, and this project was something that would help our town."

Volunteers worked to lay the sod, and now a lush green carpet of zoysia covers The Square. "When you drive by, the manicured grass on The Square makes our town look clean and vibrant," Smith said.

Building Capacity for Medical Care

The pent-up demand for free medical care in Mississippi County wasn't surprising, given the county's high poverty rate, but it was certainly disquieting. Within four months of opening its doors in March 2009, the Great River Charitable Clinic in Blytheville had already served 192 Mississippi County residents, providing an estimated $23,000 in free medical services.

Great River Charitable Clinic was spearheaded by Blytheville's Ministerial Alliance, an association of area churches. Observing the success other communities had seen with free clinics, the Alliance was determined to bring a similar program to Blytheville to serve the estimated 23 percent of the county's population living below the poverty line.

"People from all disciplines, whether carpenters, physicians, janitors or pharmacists, donate their time and talents to the development and ongoing work of the charitable clinic," said Liz Smith, chair of the board for ARCF's Mississippi County Community Foundation local affiliate office. "This level of volunteerism further enriches the community and heightens awareness of the needs of the poor in the area."

The Mississippi County affiliate office helped to build the capacity of the fledgling organization through two $5,000 startup grants for medical tracking software and dental instruments. With eager volunteers and, now, new equipment to enhance patient care, the clinic is poised to make affordable medical services available for hundreds of people in need.

The children's comedy "The Ransom of Red Chief" delighted Monroe County elementary school children.

Special Delivery: Arts for Kids

"Probably 80 to 90 percent of our children wouldn't have the opportunity to go to the symphony or theater," said Ruby Ellis, principal of Clarendon Elementary School. So, ARCF's Monroe County Community Foundation local affiliate office brought the symphony and theater to them.

The Monroe County Arts Endowment was established to provide cultural experiences for children of all ages throughout the county. Through the endowment, traveling troupes from the Arkansas Arts Center Children's Theater and Arkansas Symphony Orchestra visited elementary schools in Brinkley and Clarendon.

The Arts Center's comedic production of "The Ransom of Red Chief," based on the O. Henry short story of the same name, enchanted students. "They loved the play," said Ellis. "There was so much laughter." And the kids got in on the act at the Arkansas Symphony Orchestra's "petting zoo," where they were invited to touch and examine the musicians' instruments up close.

"This is one of the best things you could do for our region," Ellis noted. "Learning is not only about paper and pencil but also about experiences, so this contact with the arts made a major impact on our students."

History Camp Boosts Literacy

Kids in Camden spent last summer walking in the footsteps of their ancestors through the "Living through Ouachita County History" program, developed by the Boys & Girls Club in partnership with the local Cooperative Extension office. The program's multidisciplinary approach focuses on literacy, physical activity and history appreciation. Kids participate in field trips to historic sites, lessons in traditional methods of sustainable agriculture and food preparation, games reflective of the county's past and journaling to document their experiences.

Though the program keeps kids engaged and out of trouble during the summer, its most important goal is to maintain the literacy skills students develop during the school year. "Research has shown that if kids don't read and write during the summer, they lose ground and have to relearn the same skills in the fall," explained Bernie Coil, community director of ARCF's Ouachita Valley Community Foundation local affiliate office, which made a grant to support the project.

The Foundation's board members also appreciated the collaborative nature of the program. "We felt the partnership between the Boys & Girls Club and Cooperative Extension was a good collaboration, so we actually gave them more money than they requested," said Coil.

Jason Rolett, Director of the Phillips County Boys and Girls Club, is mentor for Orlando Jones, Youth of the Year.

Helping Educate the Youth of the Year

Arkansas Youth of the Year Orlando Jones plans to major in psychology at the University of Arkansas at Little Rock, then participate in the Teach for America program. After serving his nation, he wants to get his masters degree and return to his hometown of Helena-West Helena to set up a counseling service for young people.

Jones, a 2009 graduate of Central High in West Helena, was Blues Keystone Leadership Club President and Central High School Quiz Bowl Captain, but leadership and excellence weren't always a part of his life. Before he became involved in the Boys and Girls Club, Jones had no college aspirations. "Our job is to change lives," said Jason Rolett, director of the Phillips County Boys and Girls Club and Jones' mentor.

ARCF's Phillips County Community Foundation local affiliate office awarded the Boys and Girls Club $5,000 to participate in the Youth of the Year program which celebrates service to Club, community and family; academic performance; moral character; life goals; poise and public speaking.

"This is a young man who never thought he would get a chance to go to college," said Martha Lambert, executive director in Phillips County. "We are so pleased to play a part in his education, and we'll be happy to welcome him back home."

24,000 Miles for Healthy Living

In Spring 2009, Dallas County residents took steps to promote healthy living—24,000 miles worth of steps, that is! More than 200 walkers participated in DASH Across Dallas County, an eight-week fitness program in which teams competed to log the most miles. “There were so many success stories from people who lost weight and enjoyed exercising,” said Donna Ferguson, the program’s coordinator.

The program, funded in part by the JRMCM Healthy Lifestyles Grant through ARCF’s Pine Bluff Area Community Foundation local affiliate office, also included the purchase of new exercise equipment for the Fordyce Civic Center and an educational component for area elementary school children.

“Southeast Arkansas is one of the least healthy areas of the state,” said Chris Castoro, executive director of the Pine Bluff Area affiliate office. “The Healthy Lifestyles Grant established by Jefferson Regional Medical Center has really caused a lot of excitement because it’s something that the community obviously needs. And, it enables us to make grants to projects outside of Jefferson County, like DASH Across Dallas County, so it’s expanding our reach and giving us more experience and expertise throughout the region.”

Each week, more than 250 families gather at Main Street Mission to receive food boxes. With a new, fully-operational kitchen, the Mission will be able to serve many more with hot meals.

For a list of Pope County funds see page 42.

Kitchen Coalition Aids Mission

Last year, Russellville’s Main Street Mission received devastating news. The kitchen from which the hot meal program operated was not up to code and could no longer be insured. Though construction of a new facility was underway, it was still months from completion. The program could continue to distribute boxes of nonperishable goods, but meal service would have to stop.

“The whole community was concerned about Main Street Mission,” said Betty LaGrone, executive director of ARCF’s Pope County Community Foundation local affiliate office. “We realized that this could be a way that we could help, and get the community involved, as well.” So, the Foundation took the lead on a campaign to help Main Street Mission complete its new kitchen and resume meal service.

Soliciting the support of churches, contractors, civic groups and the local United Way, the Pope County local affiliate office galvanized a corps of supporters to provide manpower and in-kind donations, as well as financial contributions for the project. By summer 2009, the new facility was all but complete and lacked only a walk-in cooler. (Refrigerated vans were used until a cooler could be purchased.) “It was a real community effort and something that created an awareness of the Foundation and Main Street Mission, as well.”

Higher Ground for the Williford Library

Severe weather across North Arkansas caused floodwaters from the Spring River to invade the Williford Public Library twice in a period of two years, first in 2006 and then again in 2008. Thousands of books were destroyed, and the building itself sustained tens of thousands of dollars worth of damage.

Fortunately, this past summer, library advocate Marilyn Bischoff received word that the library would receive a grant of almost $200,000 from the White River Planning and Development District to purchase and renovate a new facility on higher ground.

Still, in order to take advantage of the grant and continue its partnership with the White River Regional Library System, the Williford Library had to demonstrate its ability to pay for utilities, taxes and insurance for the new facility. ARCF's Sharp County Community Foundation local affiliate office assisted by making a grant that will help the library pay for upcoming operating expenses.

"Our disaster relief fund had quite a bit of money that came in after the 2008 floods," said local board chair Martin Carpenter. "We were able to make a $5,000 grant to help them leverage their grant from the Planning and Development District."

Bischoff noted, "In these economic times, libraries and their services have become so much more vital to the community. This new building will serve so many people in so many ways."

The Museum of Chicot County

Preserving a Chicot County Landmark

The Museum of Chicot County (MOCCA) has been an iconic part of the Lake Village landscape for more than a century. The Victorian-era structure served first as a home, then as a state-of-the-art medical infirmary, undergoing numerous expansions and upgrades through the years. Now, the facility operates as a museum, chronicling important milestones in Chicot County history.

The museum contains an intriguing array of historical artifacts: the hospital's original surgical suite and emergency room, still preserved as they appeared in its hey-day; photos of the Great Flood of 1927; and memorabilia from Charles Lindbergh's first night flight over Lake Chicot.

Preserving this treasure-trove of Arkansas history doesn't come easy or cheap, though. To aid the effort, ARCF's Southeast Arkansas Community Foundation local affiliate office made a grant to help finance a comprehensive architectural assessment of the building. This assessment will aid MOCCA in applying for other historic preservation grants and will ensure the historical accuracy of future maintenance and renovations.

"It's such a landmark in Chicot County," said Barbara Knapp, executive director of the Southeast Arkansas local affiliate office, "The museum draws people from outside of the community, and it's the only place we have in Chicot County that really preserves a lot of history."

Making New Connections in St. Francis County

"It's so easy to focus on Forrest City because it's the largest town in the county, but it's important to us to make an impact outside of Forrest City," said Robin Jayroe, executive director of ARCF's St. Francis County Community Foundation local affiliate office. New board members representing the communities of Colt and Hughes are helping to connect the Foundation with the needs of the county's more rural areas.

One such need, brought to the Foundation's attention by board member Carol Dillahunty of Hughes, was from Hughes Christian Outreach Ministries. The organization, formed in 2007, recently acquired a building to house its food pantry, but lacked adequate storage for perishable foods. A $2,000 grant from the St. Francis County local affiliate office funded the purchase of three industrial freezers. Now the food pantry can take advantage of volume discount pricing and accept large donations of frozen food.

With continued outreach efforts—newspaper and radio announcements, presentations to civic groups and word of mouth—the Foundation hopes to further extend its reach throughout St. Francis County. Jayroe noted, "It's just a matter of communication."

Closing the Gap

The past year's economic decline greatly increased the financial burden on non-profit organizations across the state. "What happened to our nonprofits was that 1) their revenue streams declined, and 2) their demand for services increased," said Stuart Daniels, executive director of ARCF's Texarkana Area Community Foundation affiliate office.

For the area nonprofits that had established permanently endowed funds through the Foundation, the problem was compounded by the fact that decreases in the stock market meant that they would receive less revenue from their endowments this year, as well.

"We decided we could be part of the solution by guaranteeing them the return they received prior to the market's decline," Daniels said. In 2009, the Texarkana Area board created a new program to help local nonprofits whose endowments had decreased. Through "Gap Grants" from the Texarkana Area Giving Tree fund, the Foundation will make up the difference between the rate of return these nonprofits received from their endowments this year and last year.

Gap Grants will also be extended to scholarship funds established through the Texarkana Area local affiliate office so that each fund can continue to support students at the same level as last year. Fortunately, new sources of grantmaking funds will enable the local office to continue its normal competitive grant cycle, in addition to closing the gap for scholarship and nonprofit endowment holders.

Making Local Philanthropy Possible

Virginia M. "Ginny" Bartos lived out her active retirement in Mountain Home, where she was an avid volunteer, enthusiastic bridge player and member of numerous civic clubs. Bartos hoped to leave a permanent legacy to her adopted home town, so she and her advisor began exploring charitable options that would allow her to leave a gift to the Baxter Regional Hospital Foundation and the Humane Society of North Central Arkansas.

Bartos worked with her financial advisor, Jackson Rhoades, a Certified Financial Planner with the Wells Fargo Advisors Mountain Home office, to determine that the best option for her was a gift annuity benefitting both charities. The size ($1.8 million) and nature of the gift was not a good fit for either of the charities so ARCF's Twin Lakes Community Foundation (TLCF) affiliate office stepped up to help keep the assets in the local community.

"Twin Lakes Community Foundation has great support in the community, not only with grant recipients, but also local charities and professional advisors. This was another terrific example of TLCF stepping up to facilitate a partnership with Ginny, Jackson, the hospital and the Humane Society," said Janice Fletcher, executive director of the Twin Lakes affiliate office.

Although Ms. Bartos has since passed away, her forethought, coupled with the support of the Foundation, ensured that two of her beloved local charities would continue to receive significant financial support on her behalf for years to come.

ARCF's White County local affiliate office funded outdoor displays to call attention to child abuse and neglect.

Taking a Stand for Foster Kids

The life-size cutouts of children on the White County Courthouse lawn during April 2009 were hard to miss. "Foster children should be seen AND heard," read the sign held by a boy pictured in one of the displays.

Giving a voice to abused and neglected children in White County was the goal of the awareness campaign led by Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASA). The group's eye-catching displays, funded by a grant from ARCF's White County Community Foundation local affiliate office, were a visual representation of startling statistics: approximately 100 White County children are in foster care at any given time, and an estimated 367 children were abused or neglected in White County in 2008.

In response to the displays, CASA of White County received six inquiries from people interested in volunteering as child advocates, and White County Coalition for Foster Care and Adoption, which partnered on the awareness campaign, was contacted by 19 potential foster families. "I know the displays have raised awareness," said Melody Benton, executive director of the White County local affiliate office. "I've heard so many people talking about them."
